particular part, the same is transferred to Materials Management Department of Air India for disposal. These scrapped parts are disposed of through a tender process, duly categorized as metals, plastics, etc. This tendering is undertaken on behalf of Air India by the Metals Scrap Trading Corporation.

(b) No, Sir. Scrap Notes are raised in a timely manner.

(c) The issuance of scrappage note is a continuous process. The aircraft items are received in Air India Overhaul Shops which are dismantled, inspected and if found "Beyond Economical Repair" the same are scrapped and necessary scrappage advice is raised. As soon as the Scrap Note is raised, the items are handed over to Materials Management Department for further disposal action.

(d) The policy of Air India is to dispose of scrapped material as soon as there is a sizeable lot for the tenderers to bid for the same. So far there has been no accumulation of scrap material awaiting disposal. There is therefore no perceived loss in encashing the obtainable residual value. A computerized Online Materials Management System called "PROSPER" is already installed in Air India as a result of which the process of scrappage has become more efficient.
